Nathaniel Marchant (England 1739–1819) and

Giovanni Pichler (Italy 1734–1791)

5 tablets

198 cameos

Silver frames on Prussian blue cardboard behind glass

The objects are positive impressions in a modeling clay (based on chalk ground or similar), framed with strips of paper with embossed gilt edges, after cameos by Giovanni Pichler (1734–1791) and Nathaniel Marchant (1739–1819). Thematically, the cameos depict neoclassical motifs, some depicting mythological scenes, personalities, and famous sculptures from Greco-Roman antiquity (e.g., Hercules Fighting the Cretan Bull, the Laocoon Group, the Farnese Hercules, portraits of Marcus Aurelius, Socrates, and others).

Most pieces are signed "PICHLER" in Greek transcription, a few also with "MARCHANT."

The collection of these impressions is likely to be particularly interesting, as the originals are difficult to locate today or have been lost, thus documenting a significant portion of the work of these cameo makers, who were very prominent in their time.
